

NIPPER, the RCA mascot, sits atop the old RCA building, which is now Arnoff Moving & Storage's Albany headquarters. In 1954, the Nipper statue, which is 25-feet high and weighs 4 tons, was erected with an aerial beacon ascending from his left ear.

The story of Nipper began in 1884 in Bristol, England. Nipper was a mutt (part bull terrier, part fox terrier) who was adopted by family members after his master died. He would sit in his habitual pose, listening to the phonograph, seemingly waiting for his master's voice, which inspired Francis Barraud to paint the interesting scene. In an effort to brighten the painting, which he felt was too dark, he borrowed a brass horn from the Gramophone Company in London to paint over the original phonograph. They offered to purchase the painting if Francis would paint their new disc gramophone into the painting, which is how the final image came to being.

In 1900, the painting became the trademark for Victor Talking Machine, later known as RCA Victor, and the rest is history. Nipper became one of the most recognized trademarks in the world.
